World Development Report 2012: Gender Equality and Development

Authors: World Bank
Published: September 2011
Complete Book PDF (25.79MB) | View Chapters

Abstract:
The WDR 2012: Gender Equality and Development will focus on the evolution of gender equality across the world in the context of the development process. The report will consider gender equality as a core development goal in itself, and will argue that gender equality matters for the pace of development. Improvements in gender equality can generate gains in economic efficiency and improvements in other development outcomes. And gender equality has consequences for the quality and representativeness of the institutions a society develops. For key dimensions of gender equality, the report will show that although many women around the world still continue to struggle with gender-based disadvantages, much has changed for the better and at a more rapid pace than ever before. But the report will also show that progress needs to be expanded, protected and deepened. In order to understand why progress has varied across dimensions of gender equality and between countries, the report will look at how markets interact with formal and informal institutions to influence household decision-making by providing incentives, shaping preferences, or imposing constraints. Markets and institutions can combine to provide strong incentives for greater gender equality, but can also fail to do so if they treat males and females differentially. Policymakers and practitioners still face gaps in knowledge both in how gender equality matters for development and how best to incorporate these links in policy design. This WDR aims to bridge these gaps by building upon the growing body of multidisciplinary theory, evidence, and data on these links while highlighting the knowledge gaps that remain.

☐ Abstract

Describes the characteristics of powerful women and the factors that go into the pathways that lead to empowerment of women. Surveys were conducted with approximately 2,000 women across 19 countries asking them to compare present conditions with 10 years ago. Commonalties emerged such as female participation in social networks and community organizations; higher social capital allows women to feel empowered even in the face of domestic violence; and urban women's access to job matters as much as social capital. Certain aspects have to be combined with others to increase women's empowerment; for example, education combined with more freedom to move about. No one factor explains the change; but a powerful woman is able to generate and manage income; has acquired an education; and has access to social networks.

Abstract:

Provides an overview of the progress women have made in the second half of the 20th century in terms of equal rights in education; health; and labor. Building upon the UN's Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW); countries have adopted constitutional guarantees; legislation; and policies aimed at ending discrimination based on sex; marital status; and pregnancy. These policies are far advanced from the 18th century when women in Britain and the U.S. fought for voting and property rights as well as workplace equality. Progress has been achieved in: (1) primary education as well as secondary education while tertiary enrollment growth is globally stronger for women than men; (2) health improvements such as longer life expectancy; mainly driven by the decline of mortality during childbirth and the decline in fertility rates; and (3) labor market and pay equality. Change in fact begets change so improvements in one area can drive changes in other areas; for example new work opportunities can spur investments in education and health for girls. Benefits also are felt across generations since more maternal education leads to better outcomes for children.

Introduction

Despite the hardships many women endure in their daily lives, the speed that would not have been expected even two decades ago, education, health, and labor force outcomes—the gains in the speed of change in many parts of the world. Improvements that took 100 years in some low- and middle-income countries. Change has also been a decade building on gains from the decade before.

Times are Changing?

This chapter traces where progress has been made on gender equality and how. It starts with the evolution of women's rights and the fight for equality under the law. Equality of rights matters because a lack of rights can constrain the choices available to women in many aspects of life. Achieving them in today's high-income

World Bank Economic Review

The World Bank Economic Review is a professional journal for the dissemination of World Bank-sponsored and other research that may inform policy analysis and choice. It is directed to an international readership among economists and social scientists in government, business, international agencies, universities, and development research institutions. The Review seeks to provide the most current and best research in the field of quantitative development policy analysis, emphasizing policy relevance and operational aspects of economics, rather than primarily theoretical and methodological issues. It is intended for readers familiar with economic theory and analysis but not necessarily proficient in advanced mathematical or econometric techniques. Articles illustrate how professional research can shed light on policy choices. Consistency with World Bank policy plays no role in the selection of articles. Articles are drawn from work conducted by World Bank staff and consultants and by outside researchers. Non-Bank contributors are encouraged to submit their work. Before being accepted for publication, articles are reviewed by three referees—one from the World Bank and two from outside the institution. Articles must also be endorsed by the members of the Editorial Board before final acceptance.

Abstract

Although a high rate of urbanization and a high incidence of rural poverty are two distinct features of many developing countries, there is little knowledge of the effects of the former on the latter. Using a large sample of Indian districts from the 1983–1999 period, we find that urbanization has a substantial and systematic poverty-reducing effect in the surrounding rural areas. The results obtained through an instrumental variable estimation suggest that this effect is causal in nature and is largely attributable to the positive spillovers of urbanization on the rural economy rather than to the movement of the rural poor to urban areas. This rural poverty-reducing effect of urbanization is primarily explained by increased demand for local agricultural products and, to a lesser extent, by urban-rural remittances, the rural land/population ratio, and rural nonfarm employment.
